Dom Carlos' Coup d'Etat

ENGLAND'S PLEDGE TO ARMED INTERVENTION IN HIS BEHALF IN PORTUGAL.

Lisbon. But England is bound by a treaty, concluded in 1898, not merely to protect Portugal from foreign invasion, but likewise reinforcements in the shape of volunteers. In order to expense of volunteers of the next term, commenced the many paign, but likewise reinforcements in the shape of volunteers. In order to expense of the next term, commenced the next term, com protect Portugal from foreign invasion, but likewise to safeguard the throne from any danger resulting from an internal revolution. The treaty in question takes the place of an earlier one of the same kind, under the terms of which English soldiers were dispatched to Listing and the same kind, under the terms of which to avoid, so far as possible, giving any of the tents and hives and the uniform rock.

For the situation, according to the cable dispatches from Europe, is more grave than at any time since his accession to the throne, eighteen years ago. In defiance of the terms of the constitution, he has, after dissolving the Cortes, declined to take any steps for the summoning of a new legislature by ordering a general election, and has given it to be understood, through his prime minister, Dom Joao Franco, that he proposes to carry on the government for some time to come by royal decree, that is to say, as an manifest coward," as "a common thief of absolute ruler. He is imposing taxes and collecting revenue without parliamentary with such a high hand, that the Legitimists, who comprise the territorial ariserate peasantry entirely subservient to the clergy, have sent to Austria for their the clergy, have sent to Austria for their pretender. Dom Miguel, Duke of Bra-pretender, Dom Miguel, Duke of Bra-ganza; while the Republicans, who embrace the working classes in the cities, the liberal professions, such as the law-yers, the doctors, the professors, &c., as well as the university students, are out in force, clamoring for the immediate proclamation of a form of government ing to selfish and incompetent politician such as that which has brought such to wreck the country by virtue of the prosperity to the United States. Mean-authority reposed in them by their Parby the navy and the army are notoriously disaffected, as far as the crown is concerned. There have been frequent mutinies of late, indicating the disloyalty of the torops, and especially of the sations, and in spite of the steps taken by king Carlos to increase their pay, they turn a deaf ear to his blandishments, and are apparently firmly convinced that there is no hope for their country as long as its destinies remain in the hands of the present dynasty. In one word, King Carlos, who before his dissolution of the chambers was denounced by some of its members during the course of the debates as a "criminal," as "meriting expulsion," and as "far more deserving of the loss of his head than Louis XVI of France," is literally without any friends. the loss of his head than Louis XVI of France," is literally without any friends or partisans, save among his courtiers, dishonesty brought against him, nor in France, is literally without any friends or partisans, save among his courtiers, and has even forfeited the good will of those few Portuguese who were accustomed to look upon him as the most contract as farmer of the state to-obedient of all monarchs to the obligations. All the contract as farmer of the state to-obligation of the course of procedure in a company when the course of procedure in a company w tions of a constitutional sovereign.

England cannot afford to leave Portugal to her own devices. Aside from her treaty obligations toward that country, she cannot permit the existence of anarchy, or the Azores, the Cape Verde archipelago, Madeira, Delagoa Bay, or Macao, the bal-ance of naval power would be most se-riously affected from an English point of view. In one word, England cannot tol-erate any condition of affairs at Lisbon riously affected from an English point of view. In one word, England cannot tolerate any condition of affairs at Lisbon such as would expose her to the peril of any of Portugal's colonial dependencies falling into the hands of Germany, either through sale, mortgage, or seignra in sat. through sale, mortgage, or selzure in sat-isfaction for damage to Teuton life and property in Portugal.

The treaties establishing the alliance between Great Britain and Portugal, and litical and economic debacie at Lisbon; which constitute something very much whereas the blame, as I have mentioned above, belongs wholly to those incompetent ministers and dishonest statesmen who, with nothing to show for it, have glinning of the eighteenth century. One of the best known is that negotiated in the policy of the best known is that negotiated in the revenue in interest. Confronted with the 1703 by Right Hon. Sir John Methuen, ancestor of Gen. Lord Methuen. But one upon which both Dom Carlos and King Edward place their chief reliance is that under the Legitimist pretender Dom Mi-Edward place their chief reliance is that supplementing and confirming all the previous ones, which was negotiated and signed by the late Sir Robert Morier in 1873 at Lisbon. It did not receive at the time the ratification of the Portuguese Cortez, and when, a year afterward, the Lisbon government secured the legislative majority necessary to pass if, the British cabinet of sary to pass it, the British cabinet of tion, turned a deaf ear to Sir Robert's entreaties and gave him to understand find, in the hope of extricating his counthat it was not worth bothering any more about the matter. If, as is predicted, he fails in his salisbury repaired this neglect, carried out the project of Sir Robert Morier, and intervention of Great Britain. completed the instrument in 1898. Its pro visions comprise an undertaking on the part of England to safeguard the throne also from within, and to protect the king-lom and its dependencies from all foreign aggression. In return, England received the right to embark and disembark part of the country, which have been such the right to embark and disembark troops, stores, and munitions at any point on Portuguese territory, or else to convey them across Portuguese territory to any point that she might see fit, irrespective of the question as to whether she was at war with any third power. It was this that enabled the English government in the early part of 1800 to land Gen. Sir Frederick Carrington and his army at Belra, on the east coast of Africa, for the purpose of occupying the northern frontiers of the Transvaal, and thus cutting off any Boer trek in that direction.

Of course the question will arise as to why, with all these treaties of alliance

English soldiers were dispatched to Lisbon in 1826, in response to appeals for assistance from the Portuguese government, which found itself powerless to suppress insurrectionary disturbances; while eight years later the English fleet, under the command of Admiral Napier, captured the naval forces of the Legitimist usurper, King Miguel, off Cape St. Vincent, and thus restored the power of Queen Maria Della Gloria. Times have changed since then, and it is a question whether any armed intervention to-day in Portugal by Great Britain would not ential complications of a far-reaching nature with other great powers.

Yet the arrival of the British fleet in the Tagus, and the dispatch of British troops to Portugal, may become necessary at any moment, in order to pressive King Carlos from the loss of his crown.
